A small house with a detached garage on a bare lot called out for sensitively designed outdoor space that one could enjoy spending time in. The front, side and back yard, though separate spaces, were joined together to create a cohesive landscape becoming a canvas for the house to sit within. The long asphalt, rarely used driveway, was changed into a private side yard with pavers crisscrossed with creeping thyme bands and shade loving plants. The side yard has a custom designed metal gate and fence reminiscent of a private Southern courtyard where one can relax on a summer afternoon. The front yard was enclosed with a picket fence so the owner's kitties can roam around without fear from the neighborhood dogs. The automatic sliding gate provides security when driving in late at night while the trellis was conceived as a quasi porte cochere to the house.
